My name is Susan and I have been fostering Colby. I want you to know that he's a great dog. He's smart and he wants to please. He doesn't need a leash to go out. He obeys instructions very well, but he's a good runner. I think he would thrive in a home with some land- and especially a boy. He'd love to play with your son your other dog. Corgis are very active dogs, and it wouldn't hurt to take a quick look on the internet at the breed. Colby's true to every word of it. Very smart, sometimes mischievous. He's a herder, and he'll nip at your heels on occasion. That's the breed. But he's great with my two dachshunds. We've got a big fenced yard, two rabbits and a 20 year old cat. He's fine with everybody.

Colby just wants to be loved so much, [REDACTED] He needs to live with a family that's going to give him lots of attention, somebody that's not going to leave him alone all the time. For that matter, he'd be a great hiking companion. His previous owner got sick with cancer shortly after she got him, so he's had some uneasy times. But she used to take him to the dog park. He loves to swim. He's such an energetic and joyful spirit. Above all, [REDACTED] I must tell you that Colby is true to his pure breeding. So it would be a good idea to read up on MAINE what corgis are like.

Maine is a long way from Maryland, and I know Karin is concerned about the distance. I'm just concerned that he deserves a great home! Colby's special, and he deserves a good life, [REDACTED] He will be incredibly loyal and devoted to any family that gives him the love that he deserves. He will be the best dog. For that reason, if you decide that you're serious, and if you would be willing to meet me half-way, I'd be willing to drive to northernmost New Jersey, just not through New York City! That would be four hours on my end. But I would be willing to bring him to you, if you decide to have further conversations with Karin about him.
